

Cell biology

Mitochondria are the organelles that release energy from glucose. They are found in almost every eukaryotic cell, and a cell that needs more energy holds more of them.

Figure 1. A mitochondrion

The inner membrane is folded into cristae, which is where most ATP is made.